Study: How does the world see Germany?

Germany got good marks for its handling of the COVID pandemic during the first lockdown in Spring 2020

The study also looked at how Germany coped with the coronavirus pandemic. The country received excellent marks for its handling of COVID in the spring of 2020, but the slow rate at which the vaccination campaign was launched during the second wave came as a surprise, as did people's unwillingness to adhere to pandemic rules.

What are the conclusions of the joint study? "Digital transformation plays an increasing role in our work," said the GIZ's Tanja Gönner, adding that the organization is "working hard to bring in and expand" its creative power. DAAD Secretary-General Sicks mentioned a desire in the international community for easier access to the German education system. And the Goethe-Institut's Ebert confirmed the globally active cultural institute feels encouraged to "further develop and strengthen German language-learning opportunities at home and abroad."
