Coronavirus: How will Christmas markets look in Austria this year?

Christmas markets have been given the go ahead in some parts of the country pursuant to strict rules. Here's what to expect when you head out for a Glühwein this December.

Despite earlier indications that the markets would be closed - or even worse, would be restricted from selling alcoholic drinks like Glühwein - the Vienna Chamber of Commerce on Thursday assured patrons that the markets would go ahead - and that hot wine would be available.

Christmas markets in Innsbruck are also set to go ahead, while authorities in Graz are hoping to find a way to open this year.

But while the markets will go ahead - at least in some parts of the country - they'll do so subject to a strict set of rules.
