8 TIPS TO HELP YOU SURVIVE THE HARSH GERMAN WINTER

3. Get the sled out, and maybe even the ice skates

Families tobogganing in Lower Saxony last January.

As we previously reported, even the south has already seen its first flakes fall for the season. So, there's no better way for all ages to enjoy the winter than to get out with a toboggan and find a snowy slope.

And for those not satisfied by a park or a field, why not head down and try out Germany's highest toboggan run on the Zugspitze? There are even two chairlifts to get you to the top.

If you're feeling even more athletic, take advantage of the array of ice rinks across the country. The Indoer Eisarena in Hamburg is the largest ice rink in Germany at 1,400 square metres.
