SEVEN SIGNS THAT SPRING HAS ARRIVED IN GERMANY

Bikes re-appear on streets

People in Germany ride bicycles all year round of course, but there are much fewer on the streets during winter. So as the lighter nights and higher temperatures return, people dig out their bikes from the Hinterhof to ride around. So that means it's time to pay extra attention when you're crossing the road or generally going about your business. The last thing anyone wants is to collide with a bike.

Bikes that have been unused for a while are often in need of some TLC, so bike shops are bound to have a lot of customers at the moment as cyclists pour in for new brakes, air for their tyres or bike lights.

Bring on cycling season!
