How the humble Döner kebab evolved into Berlin's go-to fast food snack

The Döner kebab is without doubt one of the staples of the German fast-food scene, with over 1000 Dönerläden (kebab shops) to choose from in the capital city alone. But how did the street-food sensation come to be the worldwide hit it is today?

A typical German Döner at a snack bar in Stuttgart.

Succulent grilled meat cooked on a vertical spit, served in a flatbread with fresh salad and a sauce of your choice: the Döner is now the go-to lunch or late-night snack for millions across Germany.

The industry itself is worth more than €3.5 billion a year and a spectacular 600 tonnes of Döner meat is eaten nationwide every single day.
